

Faith is defined as complete trust or confidence in someone or something. There is only one word in the entire definition where someone might get hung up. The word complete carries with it a host of thoughts, ideals, and definitions based on a variety of factors. In the study, J. Warner Wallace reminds us that even in a criminal trial where all the evidence is given, there is still an element of incompleteness to the trial and unanswered questions of the jury. Faith might come easily to a person that has had little disappointment in their life. Security, accountability, dependability all factor into our view of Faith. Some people never grasp the concept of faith because they've been programmed NOT to trust, in other words, to not have faith. This is where the evidence of Scripture comes to the rescue. The case for Christ, the evidence of God's plan of salvation is laid out in such a way that no matter how broken you and I are, no matter what kind of preconceived notions we have engrained into our being. The step of trusting in Jesus as our Lord and Savior, the step from evidence to faith, is so easy to make that many come to a point where there is nothing left to do but jump. The leap comes with the evidence of Scripture and the faith that Jesus is waiting to catch each and every one of us. Know the evidence, present the case to others, help them make the leap!
